

Introduction to Cal Hahn's Bibliography

John D. Bowman

Perhaps Calvet Hahn is unknown to some readers of The Penny Post. If so, take a moment to read the memorial articles that Vern Morris and I wrote in the July 2004 issue. To Larry Lyons, Vern, and myself, he proved to be a knowledgeable teacher and guide, although a constant critic, on our beginnings into the field of carriers, locals, and independent mails. Each of us has gone on to write numerous articles in this and other journals, stimulated by our conversations (and arguments) with him

I found a photocopy of his typewritten bibliography in my files and have tried to present it as written. He won the Brookman and Luff awards, and probably would have won more awards except for his constant criticism of others' writings and penchant for offending others, including the editors of the philatelic journals that published his articles. He always advocated thinking "outside of the box" and often questioned traditional conclusions. At the same time, many of his articles and presentations were aimed at recruiting and cultivating a new generation of philatelic students, and it was in that embrace that Larry, Vern, and I fell.

By inspecting his bibliography, which is incomplete and does not include publications beyond the unknown date that it was written, one can see his interest was not only postal history but the early stamp issues as well. He supplemented his income by serving as an auction agent and consulted with several auction houses in the preparation of their catalogs. He was a self-styled and self-proclaimed expert, and a frequent visitor to the Philatelic Foundation when they depended on walk-in experts to assist in their expertization process.

Cal clearly wrote much of this bibliography from memory, as the dates of publication are sometimes incomplete or missing. The three "books" listed at the beginning are probably collections of his writings that perhaps exist at the American Philatelic Research Library or the Collectors Club of New York in photocopy form. If readers want to write me with any updates to this record, I would be happy to include them as an electronic resource on our website.
