US CIRCULAR DELIVERY CO.

The United States Circular Delivery Company operated as a branch of the American District Telegraph Company around the 1870s. Newspaper reports of the era sometimes listed it as part of the Manhattan District Telegraph Company or the Mutual District Telegraph Company - companies that would eventually merge into the American District Telegraph Company. In April of 1882, it was reported that the circular delivery section of the company split into its own separate company.

In 1883, the US post office took several circular delivery companies, including Hussey's Express and

Their Circulation Unchecked. "That was untrue," said Mr. George F. Truell, Secretary of the United States Circular Delivery Company, to TRUTH vesterilay when asked about the seizure of letters and circulars in their charge and the arrest of their carriers by the Post Offlee inspectors on Friday, which was reported in the papers. "They did not bother us, and can't as far as I can see. Our company is chartered to do oxactly the business we carry on by the State of New Jersey, and the United States law but prohibits the delivery of matter over regular routes and at stated periods as being in competition with the functions of the Government postal service. Our periods and our routes vary in accord with the orders we are given to execute. Boyd's Despatch, to court over the delivery of sealed circulars on post roads. If the US Circular Delivery Company continued business after the increased pressure on local delivery companies, it did so very quietly - there is currently no known mention of the company in directories or newspapers after 1883.
